

Developing and Using Evidence page disclaimer

Some important points to keep in mind when using the Developing and Using Evidence page:

- Although every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the information on the Developing and Using Evidence page, no legal responsibility is accepted for any errors, omissions or misleading statements.
- The Developing and Using Evidence page signposts users to a number of tools and publications of third parties. TCT cannot guarantee the accuracy of those third party materials or any related material.
- This page is designed to support users to understand evidence and begin to develop their evidence base; it is important to remember that any guidance applied to practise may need to be adapted to individual contexts or services.
- The Developing and Using Evidence page blog is a platform for different opinions about what makes good evidence. The Trust does not necessarily share the opinions posted in blogs nor endorse the authors.
- Comments made in response to blogs are moderated. Any offensive comment will be removed immediately from the page.
- The Mini Triumphs section simply shares examples of changing approaches to evaluation. If users consider applying these examples to their own organisation or practise. it is important to remember that they may need to be adapted to contexts or services.
